

The Knot Magazine Best of Weddings 2010 Pick

Not many people can say that they loved their wedding photos. Not many can say they loved their photographer. My husband and I can. Jim Larson was our wedding photographer and we loved him; we can't say enough positive things about him. Jim was able to capture the day beautifully. He captured moments and things I didn't even realize I wanted. His ability to make people completely comfortable while asking them to pose for pictures was incredible. His humor and ability to see the big picture while keeping an eye on the next step allowed us to have pictures that reflect the feel of day and match our memories. Working with Jim was fun!

Larson Photography was the most reasonably priced photographer we found. His price included our engagement photos, a DVD of all the photos, 300 proof prints and a website where we and all of our guests could view and download the photos. The best part is that we own the rights to the photos, allowing us to share them with everyone who cared to view them. Five days after our wedding the photos were online to view. Eleven days after our wedding we had the DVD and proofs in our hands. I've never heard of anyone getting their pictures as quickly. Rather than be annoyed that we opted to make our own album, Jim made recommendations for good websites and services.

Jim arrived early and stayed until the very end. He was calm, laid back and easy to work with. He helped make sure the day flowed so we would be able to get all the pictures we wanted. He was open to suggestions about shots we wanted and groups of people to include. It was great. He was everywhere! During the honeymoon I mentioned that I wished I had asked for a picture of the room before the guests arrived, it was there. I wished I had asked for pictures of the band, they were there too. I have nothing negative to say about our photos or our photographer. I am so happy we found Larson Photography. I highly and gladly recommend his services.
